

April 1, 2010

The San Francisco Paramedic Association is pleased to announce a new teaching position at the SFPA. The Supervising Instructor teaches courses and coordinates the resources and people needed to deliver various educational offerings for the Association, under the direction of an Education Department manager. This person supervises assigned instructors, allocates equipment and monitors the quality of instruction delivered in various courses, lectures, and seminars. This person may be responsible for developing lecture plans and courses according to the State of California Title 22 regulations. This person displays strong organizational skills when faced with multiple tasks and demonstrates the ability to engage interactively and positively with teaching and administrative staff. This person functions independently and is comfortable working in a variety of locations and with a variety of supervisors and supervisees.

Two (2) of these positions are available, and a start date of early to mid June is anticipated.

Details and application instructions can be found at www.sfparamedics.org/spinstructor.

AHA Outstanding Training Center of the Year